MILITARY TARGETS AT FLORENCE ARE BOMBED

The War Today...

By DeWitt MacKenzie
AP War Analyst

TWO TOO HOPEFUL SEEKERS after a hot tip all but made me miss my early morning train to the office by demanding to know when the European war will end, and for their pains were advised to ask Heaven which alone has the truth.

As I jumped for the coach I yelled back that nobody could give a reasonable guess until we have the solution to another mystery—when the Allied invasion of western Europe is going to take place. That's the key—barring a long drawn out war or a collapse of German morale. However, the Red army's sensational successes in the Ukraine have created some mighty interesting possibilities.

The Germans themselves have indicated worry over one contingency. This is a cross-channel invasion while the whole Nazi right wing in Russia, totalling maybe half a million men, is in dire jeopardy.

Hitherto, has been figuring on withdrawing troops from Russia to defend France. But supposing the western Allies should strike soon—say when the good weather arrives in April? The Fuehrer would be hard pushed to get help from his eastern battle line.

One argument against such an early invasion has been that normally military operations are stalled in Russia for about two months beginning with April when the spring produces some of the world's worst mud. The western Allies want heavy pressure against the Germans on the Soviet front during the early stages of the invasion so to ease the weight of the Nazi counter-attacks in France.

Red Marshal Zhukov's amazing drive, which threatens to destroy part of Nazi Marshal Von Mannstein's army and drive the rest of it into Rumania, may give the Anglo-American allies a chance to choose whether they will strike early, or wait until Russia's spring is past and the Steppes are again suitable for all-out operations. Indeed, the Russian successes may so disrupt the Fuehrer's organization in Russia that he will be indefinitely prevented from moving many troops to France.

As a matter of fact, the Nazi dictator will be lucky if he doesn't suffer a huge disaster in the Ukraine. Still, we mustn't take a Nazi catastrophe for granted. Von Mannstein is a master soldier. He's made an astonishingly clever suicide stand to satisfy Hitler's political schemes, and might pull another rabbit out of the hat.

As the battle is now developing it wouldn't be surprising to see Von Mannstein compelled to abandon defense of the southern Polish border and devote his energy to defending the gateway to the Balkans. This presumably would force the Nazis to shorten their entire line by pulling it back to central Poland.

This is one of the decisive engagements of the war.

Couple Found Dead

MARTINS FERRY, March 11.—A man and a woman were found dead in an automobile here today and Police Chief Wesley Muhaman said the death apparently had been caused by carbon monoxide fumes. He said the couple had been identified as Norman William Holt, 36, of Martins Ferry and Mrs. Rose C. Taylor, 39, of Wheeling Island, W. Va.

MANY COUNTY AND DISTRICT BATTLES LOOM

Republicans Will Contest For Many Posts; Democrats List One

More candidates than for several years will have their names on the ballots for the Republican and Democratic primary election May 9, it was revealed today following the close of petition filing for county and district offices last night.

Republicans have five candidates for state representative, two for probate judge, seven for the two county commissioner posts, five for sheriff, three for recorder, three for treasurer, two for congressman, and two for state senator.

Six Salem Candidates

Among the candidates for county offices are six from Salem, three on each ticket. On the Republican ticket, Roy W. Harris is a candidate for state representative, G. Forest Mason for commissioner; Charles O. Snyder for engineer. The Democrats are John S. Bute for representative, J. Lee Pelley for clerk of courts, and Vincent Judge for treasurer.

F. H. Johnson, Sunniville brick manufacturer, is in the race for congress, opposing Congressman Earl R. Lewis of St. Clairsville, who is seeking Republican re-nomination.

State Senator John P. Stevenson of East Liverpool, seeking his second term, has Republican opposition from Thomas F. Joseph Martins Ferry attorney.

Democrats have entered Ross D. Michener, St. Clairsville attorney, to oppose his fellow townsmen, Earl Lewis, for congress. For state senator they have a contest between Dr. J. T. Williamson of East Liverpool and Arthur T. Blake of Martins Ferry.

FOREIGN POLICY AND THE ELECTION

It is in the campaign cards that Mr. Roosevelt and his campaign managers will ring all the changes in the months between now and next November on the existing administration's grasp of foreign policy—as opposed, of course, to the unfamiliarity of the opposing candidate with what is going on behind the veil of secrecy.

The claim will be made that only Mr. Roosevelt is equipped to deal with governments abroad, for the very evident reason that he is the only one who has been dealing with them. The claim will be made that no outsider possibly could get the hang of maintaining harmony with Messrs. Churchill, Stalin et al in time to avert tragic misunderstandings. And it undoubtedly will be claimed, unless events to the contrary interfere, that Mr. Roosevelt has been doing such a good job that he is entitled to reelection on his mastery of foreign policy alone, if for no other reason. That much is in the campaign cards for certain; there may be more.

Unfortunately, no one below the official automobile level of politics in the federal establishment can know how masterful Mr. Roosevelt is proving to be in foreign policy. Neither congress nor the people can get access to any reliable information on the progress of his diplomacy. Foreign policy in the United States is the great national enigma, the super-whatisit—and if anyone doubts it just let him try to explain in ten or a thousand or 10 thousand words what foreign policy the Roosevelt administration stands for, aside from lend-lease, which is not a policy but an expedient.

It being in the nature of the transaction that wartime exchanges of opinion between governments cannot be managed on a party-line basis with the participants pretending not to know the receivers are up, no one who is not in the official family or less than one step removed possibly can have a speaking familiarity with what is going on. To demand, as Democratic snipeys are demanding, that Mr. Roosevelt's challengers for the presidency produce a thesis on foreign policy is to ask vastly more from them than from Mr. Roosevelt, himself, who has made the most of his prerogative of telling 'em nothing.

Mr. Roosevelt may be doing very well as an international negotiator—or he may be doing very badly. There's no way of knowing. In either event, another chief executive might be doing as well, or perhaps better. Mr. Roosevelt, himself, came to the job with no previous training whatever, and his eventual successor will have to do likewise, because the position and the responsibility are unique.

What it adds up to, election-wise, is that the contention that Franklin D. Roosevelt is the only American patriot qualified to talk to Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin had better be put away in methinks, then tied up in a box and put away back in the darkest corner of the least likely place anyone would think of looking for a campaign argument that will hold water.

NO SUBSTITUTE FOR FACTS

From the fact that Prime Minister Churchill was rebuked in the house of commons for letting the British press get "scooped" on President Roosevelt's recent announcement of negotiations to augment the Russian battle fleet with units of the Italian navy—and the parallel fact that Mr. Roosevelt was being rebuked at home for the manner of making the announcement—it may be deduced that this is a good example of how not to handle important news.

The upshot of the mishandling is widespread confusion in both the United States and Great Britain about the whole affair, with overtones of international complications among the Italians and gleeful gloating in Germany. But the incident, even so, is subordinate to the whole problem of how to develop a surer technique of releasing important facts with bearing on the progress of the war and the developing patterns of post-war relations. The free press of the United States and Britain has a vital interest in the problem. Its proper solution has bearing not only on national welfare, but on the welfare of all agencies of information.

Many able men have been devoting all their skill to some kind of a solution. Some of them have been doing this as officials of government; many others are professionally concerned as working newspapermen. They have made some progress—not enough to be called a solution, however. There still can be such unfortunate bobbles as Mr. Roosevelt's too casual comment on a subject which deserved extremely careful handling; such insanely haywire arrangements at the handing of the conferences at Cairo and Teheran; such collisions of method as occurred recently in the handing of news from the Anzio beachhead.

In cases like these the impatience and frustration of news organizations are secondary to the uncertainty and confusion left in the minds of the populations whose clear understanding of events as they occur is indispensable in the successful prosecution of the war. The issue over techniques does not lie between governments and agencies of communications, but between governments and the governed, with the agencies of communication striving to serve their common interest. There is no substitute for facts in performing the government's obligation to keep its citizens informed concerning the progress of their war—carefully detailed facts leaving no possibility of misunderstanding.

OTHER FOOT

The legality of the Welsh coal strike, which has tied up production at a critical period for British consumers, is established in the fact it is a trade dispute within the coal industry. The famous British trade disputes and trade unions act, so often quoted as an example for the better handling of union problems in the United States, does not forbid work stoppages in furtherance of legitimate disputes. It does forbid strikes designed to coerce the government directly or by inflicting hardship on the community, both of which are obvious effects of a wartime coal strike, but it becomes a futile technicality to decide which is which in view of the kind of showdown the Welsh miners have precipitated.

In this country, concerned over occurrence of a strike more damaging in its effect on Britain's strained economy than anything which has occurred here, there is bound to be considerable attention to the feeling of the strike shoe on the other foot. The British were genuinely concerned over the implications of an American coal strike at the climax of our war production effort. Americans, including coal miners—and including especially, coal miners whose sons and relatives are in the armed forces preparing for invasion of Europe—are no less concerned over the implications of a major strike in the coal fields of Wales at the climax of the Allied military effort.

THE STARS SAY:

For Sunday, March 12

SUNDAY'S horoscope indicates a state of affairs in which the energies and resources are divided between the social, romantic, serious and playful, and definitely practical objectives as well. It is a time for well organized and applied measures for attaining concrete results in which direction the forces and faculties may be utilized. There is promise of substantial assistance from elders and superiors for worthy ends despite minor setbacks. Persevere.

Those whose birthday it is may expect to have a year to demonstrate their earnestness, industry, talents and skills or creative resources in many diverse channels. Social, cultural and financial factors, demonstrated in crete and well systemized plans and programs, call for persistent effort, patience and a strong sense of obligation and duty, in order to secure help from elders or superiors. There may be antagonisms or reversals, but these may be offset by diligence, fidelity to purpose and confidence in eventual happy outcome. Social or love affairs may give enduring happiness and popularity.

A child born on this day should have many attractions and personal gifts as well as much practical ability and sound character, inviting the faith and substantial aid of those in responsible places. It may accumulate much property.

For Monday, March 13

Monday's astrological forecast is for a rather difficult and anxious state of affairs in which calamity might follow in the train of excitability, turbulence, quarrels, tense and destructive tendencies and emotional indulgences. Any form of loss of temper, in word, deed, vengeful acts or vindictive writings might provoke public censure or private reprisals. Accidents, thefts, illness may accent adverse conditions. In danger use tact, restraint and equilibrium.

Those whose birthday it is may be beset by a year calling for the utmost composure, prudence, self control and vigilance, as a train of adverse and menacing conditions arise, which might exact public as well as private censure or penalty. Impulsive, rash, vindictive and malicious conduct are likely to provoke disaster and regret. A child born on this day may be tempestuous, wayward, indulgent, impulsive, inviting many forms of misery and regret.

Function of Liver In Human Body

BY LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

THERE IS A somewhat too introspective friend of mine who is worried because his liver is the largest solid organ in his body, yet he it does to secrete bile. And he crossroads of You and The Universe.

As a storehouse and drugstore I give you two examples:

Vitamin D is manufactured by the action of sunlight on the skin and is carried to the liver and stored there. That is why fish liver oils are given for their Vitamin D content. In fact the liver of any animal contains some quantity of Vitamin D.

The mucous membrane of the stomach, secretes a substance which stimulates the bone marrow to manufacture red blood cells. If it is lacking the result is anemia. The substance is carried to the liver and stored there and sent out in the blood stream to the bone marrow as necessary. That is why liver is given as a cure to patients with certain kinds of anemia.

As a grocery warehouse and retail distributor the liver stores sugar, the great energizer, and sends it out to the muscles.

But do not despise the function of bile. Modern doctors sneer at the term "bilious," but there is something in it. A great American surgeon, Dr. W. T. Halstead, recorded his experience after a gall-bladder operation. Before the drainage of bile into his intestines became re-established, all the world looked black; he couldn't look at food. Then one happy day the bile began to go the right way, his appetite became ravenous and all the world sang a paean of happiness.

The liver needs plenty of starch and protein food. Too much fat seems to depress its functions. A completely equipped soldier requires 250 pounds of cotton, or 10 times what the average civilian wears.

The accordion was invented in Vienna in 1829.

The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gain-weight," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene," and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

THE RED CARNATION by BURTON STEVENSON

SYNOPSIS
Antony Bigelow, N. Y. Record columnist, is stalking gossip-news at Max's, one of the big town's famed cafes—a cave of wine-blown winds echoing who's-doing-what-to-whom: why, when, and where. He sees Jack McKibben, night clubman and brother with the gayly alluring Mrs. Lily Edgerton, and an unknown young beauty who seems scared, Lily, with ill-concealed jealousy, tells Tony the unknown's name is Leda. Tony talks briefly with Herschel Schneider, lawyer and his client, Allan Guthrie, celebrating the settlement of another heart-suit. The columnist relays to Proprietor Max Riley "tip that there'd be trouble here tonight" involving McKibben. Soon after, a stranger calls the broker "a swine" and is neatly ejected by Max's bouncer-waiters. The broker said his assailant was "just some drunk," and that Lily is "leaving for Reno in the morning." He and Tony exchanged sarcasms concerning McKibben grinned, before leaving the club with Lily and Leda. The doorman has just told Tony that a young fellow with something heavy in the side pocket of his overcoat had been asking for McKibben.

CHAPTER FOUR

"What did he do when you told him McKibben had left?" Tony asked the doorman.

"Asked me where he had gone."

"Did you tell him?"

"Tell him? No, I don't know where anybody goes."

"Of course not," Tony agreed with a chuckle. "Nor where they come from. You're the perfect doorman, Tim. I suppose this young fellow drove away then?"

Yes. He got back into his taxi and told the driver to take him to another club.

"Which one?"

"He didn't say which one."

"Evidently doing the town," Tony commented. "Good night, Tim," and he climbed into the waiting taxi and gave the driver his address.

So somebody had been driving round to the night clubs hunting for Jack McKibben—some young, handsome Southerner—something easy in his pocket. The girl had asked sort of southern, too. Had it anything to do with her? A new angle of the old game McKibben had played to? Usually he picked married women—their husbands hadn't done any hunting. On the contrary, most of them had been delighted. But McKibben had remarked that his taste was changing. What had he said? A yen for the young . . .

Something over an hour later he was writing his final paragraph: "Oh! Ever Thus, from Childhood's Hour: — Jac McKibben, attired in his usual white carnation, was swanning around Max's dance-floor last night with a charming little Leda, a newcomer. Tip was out that somebody was going to bop him. But nobody did."

A year before this story opens Antony Bigelow had been a good police reporter. Then one afternoon George Hadley, the managing editor, had called him into his office.

"Sit down, Tony," he said. "I've got an idea I want to put before you. What this paper needs is a column and it's got to be different," Hadley explained. "Not political—that's overdone; no hogwash about the downtrodden proletariat, no economic-social bunk."

"We already have some good columns—sure-fire stuff for women, but we've got to have something that will appeal to men. Now tell me this: what sort of stories do men read, when they read any at all?"

"Detective stories," answered Tony promptly.

"Right! Well, there's the idea," and Hadley leaned back triumphantly in his chair.

"But just what is the idea?" Tony queried. "A detective story every day?"

"Something like that. We're going to have a column that will know just a little more about the crime going on in this town than the police do, that will tell them where to look and what to look for."

"Fine!" Tony applauded. "Only it won't last long."

"Why not?"

"Because the first time any real cops get the columnist in a dark corner, they'll bash his head in, and then report that he was drunk and fell down and hit it on something."

"Of course we've got to have police co-operation," Hadley agreed. "You have always had it, haven't you?"

"Sure I have. But there's only one way to get it. You've got to give the police the credit."

"We'll give them enough of the credit to keep them playing along," said Hadley. "Besides, we'll have one of them with us."

"You mean you're going to have a detective write this column?" Tony queried incredulously.

Tony nodded. "Of course," he said. "Clever fellow."

"Go and see him if there's ever the slightest doubt in your mind. He can give you a steer how to keep out of trouble and still say whatever you want to say. He can also put you wise here and there—he knows everybody and has a finger in everything. Your raise starts today, and I want you to take Tom Garrity down to Headquarters and show him the ropes."

Tony's eyes were gleaming a little, in spite of himself.

"I'll try it," he said, "but remember, you told me you didn't expect miracles."

Tony didn't perform any miracles, but he did produce a good column, and after the first few weeks he found it surprisingly easy, for the contributors did much of the work. He was continually astonished at the size of his mail, at the telephone calls, at the messages that were left for him, at the people who drew him aside to murmur softly in his ear or paused beside his table at one of the night clubs to tip him off to something. There was always a tremendous lot of chaff to be winnowed away, but usually a few grains of wheat remained.

Of course he had to be careful, for his information was no better than his sources, and he had no time to check it all. But one thing at least he could do, and that was never to use anything a second time from a source which had once proved unreliable.

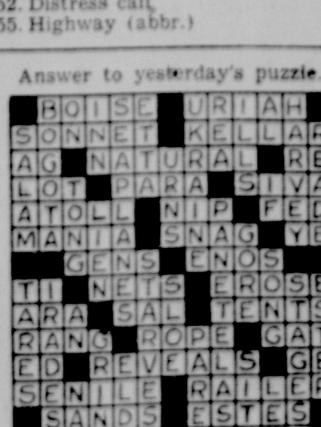

Herschel Schneider was surprisingly helpful, not only in keeping him out of trouble, but in giving him an inside tip now and then. He was a slender man of about forty-five, slightly under the medium height, with black eyes, a mass of black hair, and an aquiline nose, which made him look a little like a bird or prey—a very clever and intelligent one.

Only once had Tony seen him worried. That was in the famous Harrington case, where an eminent jurist had been stabbed to death on a street corner in the center of New York in broad daylight as he waited for a bus, and Schneider's client had been caught in the vicinity apparently red-handed as he tried to throw away a bloodstained ice-pick. On the evening before the last day of the trial, Tony found Schneider pacing up and down his office.

Wounded Yanks Coming Home From Germany

Wounded American soldiers, some of them using crutches, are pictured above in the care of Portuguese Red Cross workers at the Alcantara railroad station in Lisbon just before they boarded the S.S. Gripsholm to return to the United States. Released from prisoner-of-war camps in Germany, the soldiers are among the scores of Americans coming home in an exchange of nationals between the Nazis and the American nations. (International soundphoto).

As Yank Fliers Plastered Berlin With Bombs

This high altitude aerial photo was taken during the terrific bombing of Berlin by American planes on Monday. The bombing shot was made in the factory section. Another aerial attack with 1,100 U. S. heavy bombers and 900 escorting fighters taking part has been made on the German capital with more than 350,000 incendiary and 10,000 high explosive bombs gutting the city and environs. (International radiophoto).

U. S. SAILOR MEETS QUEEN ELIZABETH IN LONDON

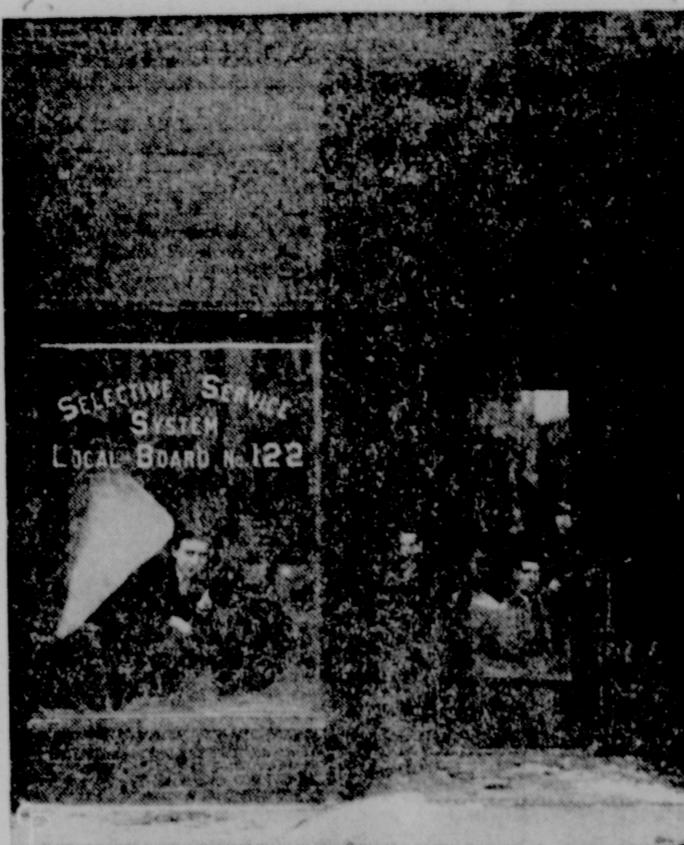

ON HER TOUR of a Red Cross club in London, Queen Elizabeth stops to talk to Yeoman Second Class Leighton S. Tomer of New York. In center is Mrs. Randolph Churchill, daughter-in-law of the prime minister. This is an official United States Signal Corps photograph. (International Soundphoto)

A Jap Plane 'Bites the Dust' Off Mariannas

A pillar of black smoke marks the spot where a twin-engined Japanese torpedo bomber has crashed into the sea, shot down by United States Naval units participating in the attack on the Marianas Islands. This plane was one of many downed by the U. S. task force. (International Soundphoto).

SMASH DRAFT BOARD WINDOWS

SELECTIVE SERVICE evidently didn't appeal to the person responsible for smashing six windows and a door of this board office in Chicago. Inductees peer through the broken panes. (International)

NEW GUN TALKS BACK TO NAZIS

U. S. ARTILLERYMEN gather around the gaping breech of a 240-mm. howitzer, the newest and one of the heaviest guns used on the Italian front. They are (l. to r.) Pfc. Desso Couch, Calhoun, Ala.; Pfc. Glen Hamilton, Martinsville, Ind.; Pvt. Herbert Lutz, Elizabeth, N. J., and Pvt. John A. Rochm, Philadelphia, Pa. (International)

LAW LAID DOWN TO NAZI PRISONER

A FEW MINUTES after this German soldier surrendered to men of the 36th Infantry Division in Italy, an American doughboy, combining gestures with a scant knowledge of German, tells the war prisoner what is expected of him in conduct. Signal Corps photo. (International)

QUINTS MAKE DEBUT IN PITTSBURGH

NOT TO BE OUTDONE by humans, "Dirty Nose," a lioness in the Highland Park Zoo in Pittsburgh, has become the mother of quintuplets, a rarity in the cat family. That gleam in her eyes bodes no good to anyone who would attempt to harm her cubs. (International Soundphoto)

Yes, Sir! This Is a Whale of a Picture

Washed ashore and stranded by the tide, 65 whales, ranging in size from six feet to 22 feet in length and averaging 700 pounds in weight, are seen on the beach at Bulls Island, off the South Carolina coast. Lieut. Edson S. Lott of the U. S. Coast Guard stands among the mammals. (International)

Hollywood Bound

FROM HIGH SCHOOL to Hollywood goes happy Donnah Jeanne Larson, 18, who sits on her packed suitcase as she prepares to withdraw from Senn High in Chicago and enroll at Warner Bros. studio where she has been signed for a screen tryout. (International)

Argentina's Chief

ACTING PRESIDENT Gen. Edelmiro Farrell of Argentina is pictured in this photo taken in Buenos Aires as he swore in members of his cabinet. Farrell took over the reins of government when Gen. Pedro Ramirez stepped down. Dr. Antonia Sagarna of the Argentine supreme court, which so far has refused to recognize Farrell as leader of the nation, has revealed that General Ramirez formally resigned, tendering the note to Gen. Farrell. (International)

RAID WASHINGTON OPIUM DENS

RAIDING two downtown dens, Washington, D. C., police and treasury department agents seized more than $10,000 worth of opium supplies and equipment and netted at least one key figure in the east coast drug trade and probably another. Above, Police Officer Robert Baker poses with part of the haul. (International Soundphoto)

WHERE DEATH WENT THROUGH

MUTE EVIDENCE of its part in tragedy, the upper portion of a roadside pole on the Worcester, Mass., turnpike hangs from its wires above the sheared-off base. Two Worcester brothers were killed and a third youth injured when an automobile in which they were riding left the road at high speed. The car was said to have been stolen. (International)

SPORT CHATTER

BY HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

NEW YORK, March 11.—Beset by trainee transfers just before today's Eastern Intercollegiate boxing tourney, Coach Leo Houck of Penn State appealed to service men at college for a volunteering heavyweight.... He got a prompt answer from Marine PVT. Wilbert Greene, who previously had fought only against the Japs, participating in four engagements in the Solomons.... Greene, who came to Penn State from Tulagi for officer training, will make his ring debut in the big tourney today.... The new Pro Football league promoters are being turned down by folks with dough in Minneapolis and St. Paul.... Probably don't think they could compete with Minnesota.... Have you noticed that Coal Miner Joe Baski is the first real 200-pound heavyweight to appear in Madison Square garden since Joe Louis licked Abe Simon two years ago?.... Everett Marshall, former heavyweight rassler, is operating a big onion farm at La Junta, Colo., and has no tears to shed for the mat game.

CEMENTING FRIENDLY RELATIONS

Ohio High schools customarily mark one space on their score boards "guests" instead of "opp." or "vis.".... And frequently the home teams take their guests to dinner after the games.... But somehow the scoreboard politeness makes little difference in what the kids in the gallery call the opposition.

SERVICE DEPT.

The New Orleans navy armed guard center basketball team, recent winner of the Southern A. A. U. basketball tourney, had a starting team composed not only of ex-college players but ex-coaches, and two of the subs also are former coaches.... Ensigns Don Brock of North Carolina and Webb Wilam of Indiana State Teachers were picked for the All-Tournament team.... The "Army Times" service newspaper, is printing a form that baseball players in the forces can use to apply for pro jobs when they're discharged.... We thought the scouts were waiting at the door.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT JUDGE IS 80

LANSING, Mich. — Michigan's "grand old man" of the state supreme court, Justice Howard Weist of Lansing, this week observed his 80th birthday.

It will be a working day for the tall, gaunt justice because the court's conference day coincides with his birthday and several dozen opinions are scheduled to be delivered down by the bench. Fellow jurists, however, have scheduled a modest testimonial dinner in the evening in Weist's honor.

Weist has been a member of the supreme bench since 1921 and served as chief justice in the years 1923, 1930, and 1938. From 1899 to 1921 he was circuit judge in Lansing.

Weist's opinions, generally pointed and sometimes acrid, are widely quoted in courts of law. They fill 90 volumes and Weist says he wants to fill an even 100 volumes before he retires, a goal he is likely to see attained.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT JUDGE IS 80

LANSING, Mich. — Michigan's "grand old man" of the state supreme court, Justice Howard Weist of Lansing, this week observed his 80th birthday.

It will be a working day for the tall, gaunt justice because the court's conference day coincides with his birthday and several dozen opinions are scheduled to be delivered down by the bench. Fellow jurists, however, have scheduled a modest testimonial dinner in the evening in Weist's honor.

Weist has been a member of the supreme bench since 1921 and served as chief justice in the years 1923, 1930, and 1938. From 1899 to 1921 he was circuit judge in Lansing.

Weist's opinions, generally pointed and sometimes acrid, are widely quoted in courts of law. They fill 90 volumes and Weist says he wants to fill an even 100 volumes before he retires, a goal he is likely to see attained.
